Everyone, it seem, is getting caught up in the wake of the Titanic, subject of an exhibit currently showing ^[1] at the Houston Museum of Natural Science. (Not to mention James Cameron's epic film is back in theaters.)

Cullen's Upscale American Grille [2] wants to create its own “night to remember” for its guests.

Available April 15 through Sept. 3, when the Titanic exhibit ends its Houston run, the restaurant is offering a special dining experience that recreates the 10-course dinner that was served to first-class passengers the night -- April 14, 1912 -- the ship struck an iceberg.

In a release, Cullen’s chef Paul Lewis -- a Brit by birth -- said of the extravagant meal:

“You have to appreciate what has gone before and show respect for the past. At the same time, I am putting my own spin on things and making the menu suit modern diners.”

Expected to be a three- to four-hour meal, Lewis’ menu includes roast squab, rack of lamb, poached Scottish salmon and Waldorf Pudding. The meal concludes with a cheese course and a tasting of Armagnac brandy, which at 112 years old sells for about $400 per ounce.

The all-inclusive Titanic Experience includes admission for 12 to the exhibit, Titanic: The Artifact Exhibition [1], round-trip transportation from the museum to the restaurant, 11500 Space Center Blvd., and the 10 course meal for 12 diners with wine pairings at Macy’s Table, a private dining room that is suspended above Cullen’s main dining room.

So what does this experience cost?

It’s $12,000, which includes a $1,000 donation to the museum. Book your experience by calling 281-991-2000.

If that’s a little too much for your budget, you can try to win a couple of seats in the News 92 FM Titanic Feast Giveaway [1].
